Wanted: A comfy dog bed that's large, durable and resists yuk smell.

I know you know what I mean! There's a reason the phrase "that dog smell" is universally known. No matter how clean your dog stays, if their bedding isn't also kept clean on a very regular basis your house can begin to have that odor. Yuk smell! ha.

Found: Crypton Outdoor Dog Bed in Ringo Newsprint (size 36" x 44" x 5")

I received an email from the makers of the office furniture fabric I used to know so well in my former corporate life...Crypton. And they generously provided free product in exchange for our review! Well hot dog if that wasn't excellent timing. We had begun to spend a lot of time on our deck on the weekends so I knew I needed to find something to make my dog children comfy and met the aforementioned requirements. (But can I just say, it's kinda spooky how I'll have a thought of "I need a _____" and more often than not an email appears that fits the bill. Dodododo....)

However, it was not love at first sight. The 5" height confused the girls at first but eventually they gave it a go. And immediately snuggled up! Singer would pretend to need assistance getting on the bed but then later I would find her like this...

Though Singer loves the bed when we are inside, it seems that Judy and Sister take turns when we are outside.

It all began on a
Tumblr blog...

We've been happy overall with the bed indoors and out. But since we bring the bed in when we come inside, I don't know how the fabric holds up if it's left in the sun and rain over time. All I know is it is a super-gigantoriffic-yuk-resistant-dog-bed and is pleasing to the eye as well. Likey!!

[All of the opinions about the product are mine and not dictated in any way by the company. Because that would be really weird and uncool. Crypton was very kind to send the product and give ample time to let the girls see for themselves and give it their paws up or paws down.]
